Final report: coding and design decisions

The goal of the project was to develop KommuneKompasset, a web application that visualizes important statistics from municipalities across Norway in an accessible and understandable way. The application was designed to simplify complex municipal data and make it easier to explore for users such as municipal planners, journalists, and other decision-makers. The system combines interactive maps, municipality-specific data pages, and data visualizations to support users in comparing and analyzing information such as population development, housing statistics, income levels, and other municipal indicators.

To better understand the needs of potential users, the team worked with two personas that guided both the design and development process. The first persona was Kari, a municipal planner working in a medium-sized municipality. Kari regularly works with statistics and long-term planning but needs fast and evidence-based overviews that can support internal discussions and council presentations. She needs to compare municipalities over time and receive clear summaries that simplify large amounts of statistical information. The second persona was Nora, a local data journalist who is interested in discovering stories hidden within municipal statistics. She prefers visual tools instead of large data tables and values concise explanations supported by charts and graphs. These personas became an important foundation for the project because they helped the team identify which functions and features would create the most value for users.

Based on the needs of the personas, the team identified several important requirements for the application. Users needed quick access to reliable statistics, clear visualizations, comparison tools, and simplified summaries of large data sets. The application therefore focused heavily on usability, accessibility, and visual communication throughout both the design and development process.

One of the main design decisions was to prioritize simplicity and accessibility. Since several target users may not have advanced technical backgrounds, the interface was designed with a strong emphasis on readability, intuitive navigation, and clear layouts. Instead of using excessive effects or visually overwhelming elements, the team chose a minimalistic and professional design style that reduced cognitive overload and improved the readability of municipal data.

Key design decisions included:

- Using an interactive map as the main navigation element to give users a visual overview of municipalities in Norway.
- Keeping the color palette minimal and professional to improve readability and reduce visual clutter.
- Designing reusable UI components to create consistency across pages.
- Prioritizing data visualization through charts, recommendations, and clear layouts instead of large text blocks.
- Developing responsive layouts so the application works across different screen sizes.
- Utilizing AI to summarize and help the user understand core concepts

Both digital and non-digital mediums were used extensively during the design phase to create wireframes, user flows, and high-fidelity prototypes before implementation started. Throughout the design sprint, the team used methods such as sketching, problem definition, storyboarding, prototyping, and testing. These methods helped identify usability challenges early in development and allowed the team to continuously refine the interface in Figma based on user feedback and internal discussions. The design process resulted in a functional prototype that presented municipal statistics in a visually structured and user-friendly way.

After the finished user testing the team iterated the original design with some minor changing of navigation and layout. This included making buttons larger and visually more clear, scaling down the map size to reduce scrolling and exhaustion for the user, and moving the review of the municipalities upwards.

Development decisions

For the programming decisions the team focused on making dynamic pages that could retrieve and display data through API calls. Team member 115 created, debugged and maintained all the graphs for both the detail and the comparison page using the Highcharts library. This made it possible to present updated municipal statistics efficiently and improve the overall user experience. Although some of the graphs are made statistically because of a lack of data in the SSB library.

A central part of the implementation was the interactive municipality map. The map was developed using JavaScript, Highcharts Maps, GeoJSON municipality data, Turf.js, and SSB API data. Municipalities were dynamically visualized using different color intensities based on selected filters, making statistical differences easier to identify visually. Users could click on municipalities to retrieve municipality-specific statistics directly from Statistics Norway (SSB). In addition, neighboring municipalities were automatically highlighted using Turf.js to improve geographical understanding and comparison possibilities. The implementation required asynchronous API calls, event listeners, dynamic DOM manipulation, and real-time rendering to create a responsive and interactive experience aligned with the needs of the personas.

Another key part of the coding decisions was implementing an ai summary agent. This was made by first purchasing an API key from ChatGPT. The key we decided on was the ChatGPT key 4.1 Mini, we decided on this key because it fits our project budget while still being powerful enough to process the data and information to summarize it in the way we wanted. After purchasing, team member 106 wrote the prompt in the node.js backend file to fit the task description with the personas in mind. A custom prompt structure was developed to ensure the AI produced consistent, easy-to-read, and user-friendly summaries in HTML format. The team put a special on prompt engineering to control the structure, tone, word limit, and formatting of the AI-generated responses. This helped ensure that the summaries stayed concise, understandable, and visually consistent within the application. The package-lock.json file was made in the terminal when making the backend folder automatically.

Team member contribution

Team member 115:

Design contributions:

- Designed graphs and data visualizations to make statistics easier to understand and compare.
- Helped create wireframes and prototypes in Figma and refined the design through iteration and feedback.
- Helped maintain a consistent design system with reusable components and styling.

Developments contributions:

- Implemented the detail page and the comparison page in the frontend application with both HTML, JS and CSS

- Worked with highcharts and developed all the graphs for the detail page and the comparison page
- Developed searching elements for the detail and comparison page, with removable tags and light filtering
- Contributed to improving usability and functionality through testing and adjustments and working on different branches in GitHub
- Assisted with debugging and refining the final implementation

Team member 106:

Design contributions:

- Contributed with designing the wireframes, high fidelity prototype in Figma and making the design interactive.
- Partake in internal discussions and revising initial design based on feedback from user testing.
- Guarantee a cohesive design throughout the different webpages.

Development contributions:

- Developed and styled an AI summary feature using HTML, CSS, JavaScript.
- Built and configured an Express.
- Created a responsive AI section with custom layout, typography, button styling, and smooth scroll functionality.
- Connected frontend and backend using asynchronous JavaScript and API endpoints.
- Integrated the OpenAI API to generate municipality summaries.
- Created a .env file for secure API key handling.
- Configured backend setup and dependencies with package.json and package-lock.json.
- Structured AI prompts to generate short HTML summaries with emojis and municipality analysis.
- Implemented API error handling, JSON responses, and dynamic handling of municipality data such as birth rates, challenges, and development trends.

Team member 141:

Design Contributions:

- Contributed to the design and usability of the interactive municipality map and filtering experience.
- Participated in wireframing, Figma prototyping, and iterative design improvements based on feedback and usability testing.
- Helped refine municipal data visualization through color gradients and interactive map interactions.
- Contributed to maintaining visual consistency across the map, filters, and comparison pages.

Development Contributions:

- Developed the interactive municipality map and filtering functionality using JavaScript, HTML, and CSS.
- Implemented dynamic color-based filtering to visualize statistical differences between municipalities.
- Developed clickable municipality interactions connected to Statistics Norway (SSB) data through API calls.
- Implemented automatic highlighting of neighboring municipalities using Turf.js to improve geographical comparison.
- Worked with data visualization, API integration, DOM manipulation, event handling, and real-time rendering.
- Contributed to debugging, testing, refinement, and GitHub collaboration through feature branches and implementation work.

Team member 129:

Design Contributions:

- Designed the shared header and footer in Figma before the implementation phase, including logo placement, navigation, colors, and spacing.
- Helped create a consistent visual identity across the KommuneKompasset website through repeated use of colors, typography, logo, and layout elements.
- Contributed to the design of the “Om oss” page, focusing on a clean and clear presentation of the team.
- Also contributed to the visual design of the designkart page by helping it match the same overall style and structure as the rest of the website.
- Helped make the navigation between the front page, “Om oss,” and comparison pages clear and user-friendly.

Development Contributions:

- Developed and implemented the shared header and footer using HTML and CSS.
- Coded the navigation menu, logo placement, and brand text in the header and footer.
- Developed the “Om oss” page, including its structure, content layout, and styling.
- Worked with the designkart page to ensure the shared header, footer, and visual style were consistent with the rest of the website.
- Contributed to testing and adjusting the layout so the pages looked clean, coherent, and functioned as intended.

Ai-declaration and sources used

AI tools were used during parts of the development and design process to support idea generation, troubleshooting, and efficiency. AI assistance helped with solving technical issues during frontend development and creating the overall structure of the project. However, all solutions were evaluated, adjusted, and implemented by the team to ensure they matched the project requirements and design goals.
